Q: Command/syntax for navigate to a line number in vim I have a file that contains about 6000000 lines. I can find the line number I want to go to by entering /line or /line 1 or /line 1.4 but for some reason when I enter the line number and hit Enter, vim is just opening a new file. If I open the file I want to view I then press gg to go back to the original file and then press 2 to go to the next line. this works but is a bit of a pain. Is there a better way to do this or am I doing something wrong? A: You're not actually doing anything wrong. gg is by default mapped to search forward in your previous search pattern. You can use the slash-star trick to map it to move backwards in your search pattern by using !* instead of gg. Similarly, * is by default mapped to search forward in your last search pattern, so using / replaces the last search pattern with the specified pattern. This behaviour is described in :help search-pattern, where it states: In search patterns, "*" and "?" match any sequence of non-word characters, and "\" and "\'" match any single backslash. If you use a backslash in a pattern, it has to be escaped. To make this mapping more generic and work for any relative line number, you can use :let &numline = &lines / \= line(','). In this case the number is relative to the buffer, so after it's been defined in your vimrc, you can run :vertical l0 to move to the 10th relative line. A: You can use :vertical to navigate up by 1 line number, e.g. to move to the 2nd line in the file use :vertical 2. If you already typed in the filepath you can use :vertical, filepath to go to that line. If you want to go to the last line use :vertical 0 or :vertical, 0 if you know the file is at the bottom, i.e. that the file is opened with :split -b -o 'path'

Q: C# abstract class within abstract class and it's use I have an abstract class called Matrix with an abstract property called Set. I want to add an abstract class called AffineTransform to it and use the Set property. The problem is that Set property in Matrix uses its own type. How can I somehow resolve this conflict? AbstractClasses abstract class Matrix { public abstract Type Set { get; set; } } abstract class AffineTransform : Matrix { public abstract double[,] Set { get; set; } } Usage var mat = new Matrix(Matrix.Set); var affine = new AffineTransform(mat); A: If Set was supposed to be subtype of Type you should have defined the property using Type. However, it should be Type for an abstract type, which is not what you need. So you have an error. You can specify an implicit interface for the property. In the signature of Matrix: class Matrix { public Type Set { get; set; } } In the signature of AffineTransform: abstract class AffineTransform : Matrix { public implicit interface ITypeSet { double[,] Set { get; set; } } public override ITypeSet Set { get; set; } } Now, you can use the property Set of the derived type from the base one. var mat = new Matrix(); mat.Set = new double[2, 2]; var affine = new AffineTransform(); var set = affine.Set; Kennedy Wilson's automotive engineering practices are renowned throughout the world.
