The Indianapolis-based insurer has launched a plan that costs no money up front, offers guaranteed renewability, and can protect you from more than 100 illnesses — all as long as you pay the premium and don't get sick. The catch? You must be willing to wait until you're covered to decide whether you want to stay covered. Roughly 80 percent of covered people will choose to stick with the plan, so it's designed to be fairly "indecisive," said Julia Horan, the vice president of public affairs for AmeriHealth. AmeriHealth, which is offering the plan, has launched a three-day test drive in Indianapolis and is considering a plan that requires new members to pay a one-time fee to join as well as monthly premiums, though AmeriHealth says it will waive those fees if someone gets sick. Those are all key differentiators from existing plans, she said. "We think we need to have more choices and less rules," Horan said. "People are trying to figure
