D rotation of an image for perspective effect? What is the best (most efficient, fastest, and most reliable?) way to use a C# function to rotate an image like I would move it with a 3D camera via a 3D API like DirectX or OpenGL? Here's the idea: I would like to be able to rotate and translate an image like I would do when using a 3D camera. When the camera rotates about its X axis, the image rotates in the direction of the Y axis and in the direction of the Z axis. Where would I go about doing this? I know that rotating an image has a cost behind it when moving it further to its origin (it increases in the cube of the distance traveled), but what cost would I incur when I rotate it up to 1,000 degrees around an axis? Actually, I'd be interested in any information, not just that about performance but also anything that's related to the idea I'd like to implement. Here's an example of that image being rotated in 3D space. Here's an example of that image being rotated taken from screen capture software. I'm looking for the fastest and most efficient way to do the things behind the camera in C#. Thanks, Alex A: This might be of some help :
