If I click on a link that tells me to page B, if there is no checkbox checked, I get redirected to a 404 page, otherwise, the page loads normally. The reason why I am doing the redirect is because there is an edit button on page B, and if the user is not logged in, the page loads with a redirect to login. What I want to do is: On page A, I need to check if there is any checkboxes to not redirect. If there are any, I need to check page B with the request, get the results, and if there is no checkbox (maybe because it is checked, or because the request was denied), display a message saying "You can't edit because no checkbox was checked". I've tried this: var dataString = "from=" + from + "&to=" + to + "&access_type=" + access_type; if (access_type == "" &&!$("#chk").prop("checked")) { //just a simple alert alert("You can't edit because no checkbox was checked"); //check if there are any return false if (false) { return false; } } else { $.ajax({ d0c515b9f4

The news and stories that matter, delivered weekday mornings. A man accused of shooting at police after escaping from a motel room in South Carolina was handed a life sentence in federal court Friday for the death of a police officer. Federal prosecutors said at the hearing that Steven Keith Small, 44, had killed Charleston officer Michael Robinson in an act of "retribution" for the killing of his pregnant fiancée in 2014. Small, a convicted felon who prosecutors say bought the gun to kill Tyquana Mackey, had killed Robinson on March 14, 2015. Small and Mackey had met online and attended a state fair where Small won tickets to attend the BET Awards as her date, though they were reportedly not officially engaged at the time. In an interview with investigators after his arrest, Small said he got into a fight with Mackey during a party they attended that ended with Small stabbing her in the head with a knife before shooting her in the stomach and a leg, then fled with the gun. Prosecutors
