Werewolves (4 units):6 points Rarity: Low Attack:7 Health:9 Armour:4 Damage:3 Special Rules: Bite:0.5, Indestructible (which makes them immune to magic), Blades (2 attack rolls at 1) and

Bludgeoning (2 attack rolls at 1) The Werewolves of the Necromantic clan are perfect for the role of Beasts. Their classic armour of Werewolf skin and natural claws, and the signature Blood Bowl Bat-Skull emblems make them the most iconic blood bowl team. (When using the Werewolves in the Bloody Burial team, some werewolves can be broken by a failed AP roll in the Burial Pit (40 pts) rather than being stunned!) Flesh Golems (10 units):10 points Rarity: Medium Attack:8 Health:12 Armour:4 Damage:5 Special Rules: Anvil: Make one attack roll at -5, No Retry: Lose any die roll (passed, failed or hidden) that would have scored any hits, No Retry: Lose any roll that would have scored any hits in the Team (except in the Team itself) The Flesh Golems of the Necromantic clan were more common before the All Flesh Must Be Eaten rule became a reality. The Flesh Golems can still be found in some graveyards around the Old World. Some Necromantic players can even use them to provide their own zombie army! Ghouls (8 units):6 points Rarity: Low Attack:5 Health:9 Armour:2 Damage:2 Special Rules: 8+: Make one attack roll at +2 and one at +2. 2+: Make one attack roll at +1. 4+: Make one attack roll at +2, a defence roll at +0 and a second attack roll at +2. 5+: Make two attack rolls at +1 each, a defence roll at +0 and a second attack roll at +1 each. 6+: Make two attack rolls at +1 each, a defence roll at +0 and a second attack roll at +2 each. Ghouls are some of the easiest enemy models to recruit. An undead army that can shift into pure Frenzy at any time, the Ghouls have Several years later, the boy is now a man and he has a long-lost brother - driven mad by grief for their father. The townsfolk, seeking to learn the true identity of the extraordinary young samurai, invite him to take part in an illegal tournament. The samurai excels and faces his brother, only to discover that the event has been manipulated to restore peace in the land. The samurai and his brother encounter a young woman who is hunted by a monster at large in the town. In the 19th century, a poor swordsman tries to lift himself up by strength and wealth. However, he only is able to be arrogant and worthy of nothing. He had thrown his possessions away in the town and lived on his own. His sword had been passed on to him by his father. The sword proves that it is strong, but there was no mark that indicated either the previous owner or the current one. He meet a child, and as he had been taking care of him there, he felt bad for leaving him alone in the house for a long time. He rescued the child and took him with him. The child seemed to be a real jerk and he could not even use his luggage. He was also unable to use the house and it only looked like the size of half a village when he entered it.

The eponymous pastiche of X-Out is a story of what started as a gag at a friend's graduation party and later became an actual musical act. This was a time when the group Skinless Lizard, infamous for being one of the first punk bands in Russia, was getting serious and decided to write a music video for the song "The Heart Propeller". Among the friends gathered to participate in this memorable collaboration was the young German girl Yang, who joined the project a few days before shooting the video. While preparing herself for the shoot, she became a part of the project as a character and delivered, despite being scantily dressed, an intense performance. And in that moment, several months before the release of the first song, a small weird group, with different makeup, appeared on the YouTube channel of a young Russian guy as X-Out. Thanks to their bold, self-deprecating humor, the group immediately became popular in the Russian punk scene, becoming the unofficial soundtrack of that scene. From then on, the group became a real project, recording an album and a string of chaotic videos, more or less in chronological order. And then a weird thing happened. In March 2020, as much of Russia was enmeshed in the coronavirus crisis, a video by the group showed up on YouTube as a "new" song about Russian social isolation after a recent wave of fatal incidents with personal firearms. The video was like a hymn of the low and the weak, an SOS from the forgotten people of this country, who end up shooting themselves in the head. Right before filming, Yag took off her coat, revealing a pair of pointy, but extremely short, shorts. These shorts, alone, revealed one of the most disturbing scenes of the video. A delicate child, she had a deep wound on her stomach, as if someone had removed the skin with a scalpel, then treated her. The video was called "The Day of Monsters" and became a hit on the alternative Russian punk scene. With this, an era of punk and glitch-electro in Russia came to an end.
