Rockstar Hindi Movie Download 720p Hd. Â· 2v2.1.0.4. Q: How to get file details using contents of a path I have a path pointing to a file on my system. I am using C# and am writing a little utility to get the file information about the file. In my searches I have found that there are ways to do this using CreateFile() and then GetFileInformationByHandle(), but how would I get file information based on the path of the file? I could do a search for the file in all locations, parse the return, and then determine the location by searching the locations, but that seems like a silly way to go about this. Is there a better, cross platform way to do this? A: There is no 100% cross-platform way of doing this. This is where languages like Windows can be really useful. If you have a c# implementation of the Windows API, you can get the file information using this code: [DllImport("kernel32.dll")] static extern uint GetFileAttributes(string fileName); uint ret = GetFileAttributes(@"c:\tmp\foobar.txt"); The function GetFileAttributes takes a path to a file, or a directory. The return is a 32-bit integer which returns a lot of information about the file. You can also use [DllImport("kernel32.dll")] static extern uint GetFileInformationByHandle(IntPtr hFile, FileInformationClass fileInformationClass, out uint lpFileInformation); See the FileInformationClass enum for the full list of information you can get from the file. Q: display:inline-block & floating to prevent content overflowing container I want to display several divs next to each other but still have them all place next to each other(so they don't resize when screen width changes). So I added display:inline-block to divs and floated the divs, but this creates a problem for me. If I try to display the divs all in the left most or right most position

A: Basic idea Read all lines from file. Split each line using " " as delimiter. Put every line into array which will be represented as one entry in dict. Create one key for every line in the dict. Code #!/usr/bin/env python3 # -- coding: utf-8 -- import json import sys def create_dict(lines): line_iter = iter(lines) d = {} for line in line_iter: fields = line.split(" ") key = fields[0] value = ".join(fields[1:]) d[key] = value return d if __name__ == '__main__': fp = sys.argv[1] my_dict = create_dict(open(fp, "r").readlines()) print(my_dict) print(my_dict.get(sys.argv[2])) Q: Run two.exe from one batch script I have two.exe files and a batch script to run both of them: c:\msg\msgs.exe c:\msg\write.exe msg.bat I want to run each of them one by one in their own windows. For instance: I want to run c:\msg\msgs.exe and wait for the message to be printed I want to run c:\msg\write.exe After the two jobs are done, I want to wait until a certain point and run msg.bat (which is part of all three of them) A: You can use START/START /WAIT to start msgs.exe and write.exe in separate windows, then in the final stage, run msg.bat @echo off start /wait c:\msg\msgs.exe start /wait c:\msg\write.exe msg.bat You'll need to use forward-slash instead of backslash. EDIT: As @DaveRoberts was mentioned in
