To evaluate the effectiveness and acceptability of a sexual support programme during treatment for women with cancer. An open-label, single-arm feasibility study. Four out-patient centres in the UK. Consecutive sample of 22 women (aged 30-75 years) with gynaecological or gastrointestinal malignancies treated with pelvic radiotherapy or pelvic surgery. Participants attended the Sexuality Education and Support (SES) programme at fixed intervals during treatment (3-5 sessions). Sexuality, sexual distress, sexual function, sexual dysfunction, quality of life (QoL) and treatment side effects. SES was found to be acceptable and feasible. The majority of women experienced improved levels of sexual function. SES improved sexual function during treatment. There was no clear association between the time spent on SES and the benefit of treatment. SES is an acceptable and feasible approach to supporting recovery of sexual function in women undergoing pelvic radiotherapy or surgery for gynaecological cancer.Q: Multiple glibc calls with timeout. What for? So, in PHP I have time() function, that returns me current UNIX timestamp. It looks like: However I've seen in some of PHP applications that there are calls to time() at the beginning of PHP script. I would like to understand what this could be useful for. A: time() is not only a constant. In PHP it's actually an alias to the internal function time(). The latter is a pointer to the function: The function
