Desktop publishing (DTP) Desktop publishing, or DTP, refers to the practice of creating images to be used as pages of print material (brochures, newsletters, news articles, books, and so on). In the past, print-ready images were created on a high-end desktop computer using specialist graphics software and then print quality output (usually professionally formatted) was generated in a high-end post-print house. DTP requires specialized software that enables you to create the text, images, and other content that will be used to create a document. It usually requires other specialized plugins, such as Adobe InDesign. Given today's low cost of ink and paper, the actual printing of a document these days usually takes place on a lower-end desktop or laptop printer. Because these devices are designed for lower cost and are usually not full-scale professional printers, they don't have the same level of quality as the higher-end output. Printers of this sort, called pre-press output, are expected to produce outputs at the standard levels (or as close as possible to them) that are then reprocessed for printed output on a higher-end device.

Q: lubuntu's Unity is not working when I move mouse to the top bar I am using Lubuntu 15.04. When I move mouse to the top bar (Unity Launcher), nothing happens. The same happens when I hover over anything in the menus. I already restarted it. Here is a video illustrating the issue: A: the problem was solved by going to lxappearance/themes. and changing the color of font-icons from "none" to "orange". Q: Using regex in copy/paste. x86 Quick question. I'm trying to check whether "123Test" in the main, through some renaming. I've been doing: `if ($line =~ /^123Test/) { $this->line = "123Test"; } else { # Do something else... }` But this isn't working, and if I try and put those into a function like: `sub linecheck { if ($line =~ /^123Test/) { $this->line = "123Test"; } else { # Do something else... } }` Then it says that $line is undefined. Am I doing this the correct way? It doesn't seem like I can do this in the function? Thanks for your time! A: $line isn't defined in the scope of the function. It's defined in the scope of main. You want to pass the string into the function, and then manipulate the contents of the string, like so: `sub linecheck { my($text) = @_; if ($text =~ /^123Test/) { $text = "123Test"; } else {` gonadal steroids on the behaviour of male rats was studied in the open field with the use of a double blind test. The experiments were conducted at the age of 6-7 and 15-16 weeks. High doses of progesterone and 17-keto-progesterone during the period of puberty caused the development of a more masculine behavioural style. The same doses of progesterone during the period of sexual maturity led to an exacerbation of the emotional-affective disorder. The sex-steroids possessed a stimulating effect on the development of male sexual behaviour. Progesterone was accompanied by a decrease in locomotion and an increase in the intensity of the defensive reactions of male rats. The maximum effect of the sex-steroids was observed after a single administration. After the termination of hormonal treatment a
