This week, it adds a variety of innovative and influential figures from the worlds of business, politics and philanthropy to its board of directors. In addition to a number of hard-working public servants and prominent philanthropists, Google is also bringing on Shanti Goenka, a leading figure in the software industry who has worked with Google for the past 12 years. The addition of Goenka signals Google's desire to enhance its relations with the Indian government, with whom it has been engaged in a heated battle over YouTube's policies in India. As Goenka becomes an advisor to the Indian government on education policy, he will also have a direct impact on the planned "self-learning university" that Google is reportedly working on in collaboration with the Indian government. Goenka has also been the director of Accenture for the past eight years. Under his leadership, the consulting firm has expanded its digital offerings to accommodate their clients' growing adoption of mobile and Web-based technologies. He was also a leader in the development of Accenture's expanded strategy to carve out a new role as a technology adviser for clients — and the company is now planning to further expand that role. Previously, Goenka led international development at Reuters, the news service at Thomson Reuters. He was also head of development for the Reuters Institute for the Study of Journalism at the University of Oxford and the BBC's Europe Election Unit. More recently, Goenka has been an advisor to international organizations such as the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the World Bank and United Nations Development Programme. He also leads the Open Knowledge Foundation, which, in addition to Goenka, includes digital rights activists James Ballinger, Kate Crawford, and Michael Lee, and academic Lawrence Lessig. Google has been going through some seismic changes of its own, as Sergey Brin and Larry Page now jointly hold the CEO title, and Page has been busy building up the company's social

We would like to address the users' comments and thoughts here.

1. In "Optimization", the title of "SETUP" instruction has been changed to "Install". By double-clicking the icon and selecting "Install", the system will install the application on the memory stick.
2. To match the palette of the PlayStation®Portable, the design of icons and background images has been optimized. For more details, please refer to the following webpage. (Links to the original icon and background image are included in this document.)

It seems that many users have missed it in "SETUP" during the installation process. The installation instructions in this document have been provided to ensure user's understanding. We apologize for any inconvenience.

3. Thanks for your suggestions regarding the execution speed of the application. When the user is playing, the game runs in default mode. Therefore, enabling the services to run smoothly while listening to music and watching movies is required, but the game itself needs memory. On the condition that the user is able to install more than 100MB of memory stick memory, the game can speed up automatically.

Thank you for your suggestions. We appreciate your enthusiasm toward the PlayStation®Portable. We will continue to develop the software.
